Defying Gravity in Testing

@Brainstormer I'm switching between admin edits and a normal user view to see what changes propagate. Create variations of this scenario.

Good thinking—examining admin edits versus regular-user view highlights propagation and state/permission inconsistencies.

Here's a real example: in a university course enrollment system used by students and a registrar office, conflicts popped up during a short registration window and the add/drop cutoff. Seats are scarce (course capacity), ownership is explicit (a seat is assigned to a student record), and registrars can manually override enrollments or move people from waitlists. Students saw "enrolled" or "available" on their dashboards while registrar logs showed them on a waitlist or pending hold — a classic looks-enrolled-but-is-waitlisted contradiction. People there analyze the problem by checking invariants (seat counts vs assigned students), auditing who changed what and when, and tracing visibility boundaries between admin and student views to decide reconciliation or messaging approaches.

In your system, what is the equivalent admin-edit vs regular-user-view state or propagation mismatch, and how would you validate or resolve it?
